SCENE SETTER: When news broke of the disappearance of three civil rights workers in Mississippi, President Johnson called Sen. James O. “Jim” Eastland [D–Mississippi], the powerful chair of the Senate Judiciary Committee. As an arch-segregationist, Eastland dismissed the disappearance as a “publicity stunt” and assured Johnson there was “nobody in that area to harm them.”

President Johnson: [answering on speakerphone] Jim?

James O. “Jim” Eastland: Hello, Mr. President, how you feel?

President Johnson: I’m doing all right. I hope you are. You got a lot of sunshine down there?

Eastland: Need some rain—we need rain mighty bad.

President Johnson: Well, we’re so dry in my country that we’re going to have to sell off all of our cattle if we don’t get rain.

Eastland: Well, I’m in the same shape: got a cotton crop just burning up.

President Johnson: I’ll be darned. I thought you’d be harvesting cotton pretty soon. When is it, July?

Eastland: Yeah.

President Johnson: I guess they’re harvesting the valley right now.

Eastland: Uh-huh.

President Johnson: Jim, we got three kids missing down there. What can I do about it?

Eastland: Well, I don’t know. I don’t believe there’s—I don’t believe there’s three missing.
President Johnson: We got their parents down here.

Eastland: I believe it’s a publicity stunt.

President Johnson: They say that their parents are here, and they’ve come down to see the Attorney General [Robert F. “Bobby” Kennedy], and they’ve seen Burke Marshall, and they’re going to be interviewed by the FBI [Federal Bureau of Investigation]—the parents. And they’ve got some newspaper people and some photographers with them and couple of congressmen: Congressman [William Fitts] Ryan [D–New York] and this Republican, Congressman Ogden [R.] Reid [R–New York], whose folks used to own the Herald Tribune in New York.

Eastland: Yeah?

President Johnson: They want to come to the White House, see the President, and I told them that I thought that that would be better to let Lee [C.] White—who handles matters like that for me—talk to them, and he’d go up to Ryan’s office and talk to them. I don’t know whether that’s going to be satisfactory or not.

Eastland: Now, I’m going to tell you why I don’t think there’s a damn thing to it. They were put in jail in Philadelphia, in East Mississippi, right next to . . . county right next to John [C.] Stennis’s [D–Mississippi] home county, and they were going to Meridian. There’s not a Ku Klux Klan in that area; there’s not a Citizens’ Council in that area; there’s no organized white man in that area. So that’s why I think it’s a publicity stunt. Now, if it had happened in other areas, I would pay more attention to it, but I happen to know that some of these bombings where nobody gets hurt are publicity stunts.

This Nigra woman [Fannie Lou Hamer] in Ruleville [Mississippi] that’s been to Washington and testified that she was shot at 19 times is lying. ’Course, with anybody that gets shot at 19 times [slight chuckle] is going to get hit, and she hasn’t been shot at a time, and nobody’s tried to bother her. They let her sit in on the Democratic . . . in the Democratic county convention this morning.

President Johnson: Uh-huh.

Eastland: I don’t think there’s anything to it.

Eastland: [speaking over President Johnson] Let me ask you this question about these three that are missing: Who is there to harm them? There’s no organ—there’s no White organizations in that area of Mississippi. Who would—could possibly harm them?

President Johnson: Well, might have some crank or some nut, like they locked [Eastland attempts to interject] a man up in Minneapolis [Minnesota] today for saying he’s going to kill me Friday when I go out there.

Eastland: It’ll take a crowd to handle—make three men disappear.

President Johnson: Well, it depends on the kind of men, Jim.

Eastland: Huh?
President Johnson: It depends on the kind of men.

Eastland: Well, there’s nobody in that area to harm them.

President Johnson: They might take a big crowd to take three like you.

Eastland: [chuckling] Ah, well—

President Johnson: I imagine it wouldn’t take many to capture me.

Eastland: [continuing to chuckle] Well, I’d run.

President Johnson: All right. Well, now, you get that rain for both of us and send it on east when you get through using it.
